ABOUT THE PROJECT

‘Care for change’ is a five-day training course for youth workers that will focus on the development of emotional intelligence and conflict management skills on three levels: interpersonal, intrapersonal, and systemic.

We will use non-violent communication, embodiment and theater tools, with the goal of finding new strategies to approach conflicts, reduce polarization and create more empathy in ourselves and our communities.

All of it while enjoying the beautiful Spanish countryside and sharing experience with 20 participants from 7 different countries.

WHAT WILL YOU LEARN?

Participants will have the chance to explore key socio-emotional competences such as...

- Self-awareness: We will gain awareness of our personal history, values and beliefs, and how these influence our worldview.
- Emotional management: We will learn to welcome, understand and regulate our emotions in a healthy way.
- Empathy: We will practice our ability to understand and empathize with the emotions and needs of others, even those with worldviews different from our own.
- Communication and mediation skills: We will train our ability to communicate assertively and listen empathetically.

THE METHODOLOGY

An experiential learning approach

Socio-emotional skills are most effectively learned through practice and experiences.

Therefore, we will use an experiential methodology that utilizes play, embodiment, applied theater and artistic expression to generate memorable learning experiences.

Through these activities, we will explore useful tools and frameworks, that are inspired in systemic psychology, nonviolent communication, emotion-focused therapy and mindfulness.

Each session will be focused on a specific skill, and participants will have the chance to become aware of their own patterns, and practice new approaches.
